

Gateway Auto Museum
by Rachel Pille Roth

Terry and I toured some areas of western Colorado last week, and we stopped at the Gateway Auto Museum. If you want to look it up online, the website is: <http://www.gatewayautomuseum.com/>. All of the cars are in mint condition; we would have called it 'cherry!' There was a 1956 Ford Fairlane that looked like Finn Moeller's convertible. I found a picture of it in our senior annual, scanned it in, and sent it to him. In his return message, he didn't mention if it was the same year. And I don't know enough about cars to say.

The museum is set among stunning scenery with a hotel in the same complex that appears to promise a comfortable, relaxing weekend getaway for couples. The Founder and Chairman of the museum is John S. Hendricks, who has been in the news recently, but in an incident unrelated to the museum. He is also the Founder and Chairman of Discovery Communications, and he was interviewed in the news story about James Lee, who took hostages at the Discovery Channel building.

It was an amazing museum, and the cars brought back so many memories.
